To become a Project Coordinator you need ...

- at least 2 years experience in a similar leadership position in an international context of a humanitarian aid organization or in an international development agency (for example, with an NGO)
- experience being responsible for budget, security management and context analysis are advantageous.
- good organization, communication and negotiation skills
- experience in management and in the supervision of colleagues, ideally in interdisciplinary teams
- sensitivity in dealing with people from other cultures
- preparedness to work in unstable contexts
- fluency in English; knowledge of French, Arabic and/or Russian an advantage
- 12 to 24 months availability
„I have been leading a project for children with HIV in Kulob in Tajikistan for two months. MSF is very well organized with their computer programs, project planning and management instruments. This has really supported my work. In this project we have achieved a good dynamic and done high-quality work in just a short time. The big challenges of our daily work are posed by insufficient knowledge, poverty and the stigmatization of HIV positive people. But for me, this just makes the whole operation even more valuable. “ Omar Gamdullaev / Tajikistan

„I have already worked for MSF as a project coordinator in Nigeria and Papua New Guinea, and right now I am managing a project in Myanmar. The work as project coordinator is multi-faceted. I am a trained nurse, which enables me to quickly get an overview of the medical program. I am also responsible for the logistic and administrative tasks, as well as supporting all colleagues. My greatest task is keeping an eye on security. This depends a lot on how the local population perceive us. In conflict situations this means that a lot of sensitivity is required. I believe that courage, kindness, honesty and a touch of humor makes the world a better place. I want to tell people in need: ‘You have not been forgotten.’ “ Isabel Weese / Myanmar
